It provides for the preventing of discrimination between persons and places, and contains provisions on the long and short haul; prevents pooling, and fixes a reasonable maximum schedule of rates, making it a penalty for any railroad company to violate any of the provisions of the bill, punishable by a fine of $1.000 or enjoinment from doing business. The railroad commissioners are given full authority to investigate all complaints, award damages, and to regulate freights in conformity with the schedule of rates. The rates fixed by the bill are based upon the joint Western rates. It follows the Inter-State Commerce bill as nearly as can be. Senator Smith introduced Senate bill No. 2, "to regulate the transportation of freights by railroad and to prevent extortions and unjust discriminations, and to hereafter make the office of railroad commissioner appointive, to increase and define the powers of such officer, to fix the compensation thereof, to provide a mode of adjusting differences between shippers and railroads and to establish penalties for violations of the bill.". GARFIELD.

An Interesting Day at the National Capital.

Unveiling of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland's Statue of General Garfield and its Presentation to the Nation-The Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The bluest of blue skies, a warm and brilliant sunshine, gratefully tempered by a gentle breeze, the martial strains of many bands, sidewalks crowded with stalwart men in military costumes intermingled with gaily dressed women, were the characteristics of the morning hours of the day of the unvailing of the statue to the memory of General Garfield. The route of the procession was quite elaboratery decorated with bunting, and the city presented the usual holiday scenes, all the Executive Departments being closed. The servants of Uncle Sam swarmed to Pennsylvania avenue to see the sights. As eleven o'clock approached, the various military companies assembled around the broad avenues of the Hotel Arling-Shortly after midday the order "March" was given, and the gorgeously uniformed soldiery started for the Capitol in the following order:

Grand Marshal and Aides. FIRST DIVISION. Battalion Third Artillery. Garfield Guard of Honor. Society of the Army of the Cumberland Battalion of Marines. Detachment of Sailors from the United State Steamer Galena. SECOND DIVISION. District Militia. Grand Army of the Republic Civic Societies.

The march down Pennsylvania avenue was greatly interfered with, proper precautions for clearing the route of vehicles not having been taken. The result of this neglect was that many halts had to be made, which detracted greatly from what would otherwise have been a very imposing procession. Long before noon the streets leading to the junction of First street and Maryland avenue were packed with people. A solid phalanx twenty deep was ranged on the sidewalks that encircled the space, in the center of which the vailed statue rested on its granite base. At twelve sharp the entrances to the grand stand were thrown open, and the invited guests were quickly assigned to seats. Among the first to arrive were the sons of General Garfield, Hon. W. W.

Corcoran and Judge Hagner. Secretary Bayard and Attorney-General Garland were the first members of the Cabinet to arrive. They were followed by Chief-Justice Waite and the associate justices of the Supreme Court. At one o'clock the President, accompanied by General Sheridan, arrived. Simultaneously the vanguard of the procession appeared in quick march from Pennsylvania avenue. Colonel Wilson then announced that the proceedings would be opened with prayer by Rev. S. H. Giesy, D. D. After Mr. Giesy had concluded his prayer, the "Star Spangled Banner" was very effectively rendered by the full Marine Band. As the last note died away, at twenty minutes past one o'clock, the American flag which had covered the statue was quickly drawn away. The salute from the south front of the Capitol was then fired, after which General Sheridan introduced the orator of the day, Hon. J. Warren Kiefer, who proceeded to deliver his oration, a long and elaborate eulo-The statue unveiled to-day, the orator declared, was not alone in honor of a citizen, distinguished for good qualities of head and heart; not alone to a scholar eminent for his attainments; not alone to a soldier renowned for bravery and successful high command; not alone to a statesman and politician as wise and as prudent as he was outspoken and bold; not alone to the Chief Magistrate who wielded the scepter of power in the interest of the citizen; but to one who combined within himself all these various characters and illustrated all these qualities in a single life. This statue was mainly a tribute from General Garfield's immediate companions of the army of the Cumberland, prompted by love, born of camp, bivouac and battle, yet in a larger sense it was the Nation's tribute to the memory of a citizen, educator, soldier, statesman and ruler. After a brief description of the monu ment, General Keifer sketched Garfield's career as scholar, teacher, soldier, statesman and President from his boyhood to the day of his death at Elberon, and then, in closing, said: My comrades, he now musters with that larger part of the army of the Cumberland who, having paid the price of devotion to the cause and ountry, and fulfilled life's earthly mission, have passed on to join in the Grand Army of the Republic beyond the grave. We are all soon to be there and muster again as one reunited host, Comrades, this splendid statue is worthy of you who conceived it; it is worthy of the great sculptor who created it; and it is also worthy of him whose life character is so imperfectly described by me and so grandly symbolized by the artist. Enduring as this bronze statue may be, the ruth-less vandal or iconoclast may demolish it, or Time, the destroyer of all things not fashio by omnipitence, will crumble it to dust. What the artist has done and what we may do or say here to preserve and perpetuate his name and fame may pass away and be forgotten; but the sun of his glory has risen, full orbed, high in the firmament of eternal truth and justice, there to shine on and on through the ages. Socrates was condemned to drink the fatal cup of hemlock, and thus give up his mortal body, but his philosophy the poison could not kill. It was immortal. So Garfield was doomed to fall by a fatal bullet, and thus surrender his mortal body; but his words and deeds did not die. They belong to eternity.

They were immortal. Our hero cared little for past example compared with present duty. He believed in a morning star of progress reigning perpetually in the firmament of our Republic to set only when the eternal morning pales in its glories all the lights of time; so may we, guided and controlled by this bright star of progress, continue with the best light within us to perform toward our fellow man and our country the full mission of the purest life, remembering that

THE STATUE. The statue is regarded by its sculptor, Mr. J. Q. A. Ward, as one of his most successful achievements. Its position is a commanding one. The small circle at the intersection of First street and Maryland and Pennsylvania avenues is directly at the foot of the Capitol grounds, and the statue is to be seen to fair advantage from the Capitol and surrounding grounds, and, from the intersecting streets. The statue rises thirty feet into the air, and surmounts a broad and shape ly granite base and graceful pedestal.

-Extraordinary Police Preparations in CHICAGO, May 14.-A special to the Herald, from Ottawa, Ont., says: "Despite the secresy maintained by government officials, some interesting circumstances in connection with Mr. O'Brien's visit to Canada have leaked out. Serious Charge Preferred Against the Captain of the Lost Schooner Parker M. Hooper-Chief Mate Woolcott Claims that the Vessel was Deliberately Cast Away, the Second Mate Assisting. BALTIMORE, Md., May 14.-A letter has been received by Mr. John E. Doyle, No. 806 South Broadway, Baltimore, from Three sides of the shaft are inscribed as Oliver Woolcott, first mate of the schooner Parker M. Hooper, relative to the loss of that vessel in March during her voyage from Havana to Boston. The letter was written on board the Italian bark, Nord America, which took the crew off the schooner Parker M. Hooper, and was mailed from Almeria, Spain. The letter charges that the captain of the schooner wanted to lose her, that he spoke to Woolcott about vessels being lost so as to get the insurance money. Woolcott told the captain he would not scuttle a vessel unless he was well paid, and the money put in his hand beforehand. The captain shunned Woolcott after that, so states the letter, and transferred his confidence to the second mate, and sustained the second mate in disobeying the orders of the first mate. Woolcott stated that the vessel lost a rudder one day; that the captain put one Determined that O'Brien Shall Not in its place that was no good, and that he refused to permit Woolcott to make one. The rudder finally went adrift and the called the Derry of Canada. Just now it captain said he was going to leave the is full of determined Orangemen. They vessel. WASHINGTON, May 13 .- The Critic says o-day: 'The report of the precarious condition of Justice Wood, of the Supreme Court, revive the gossip as to whom the President would be likely to appoint on the Supreme bench. Attorney-General Garland is naturally the first person thought of, as it is known that he has long been ambitious to occupy a seat on the highest tribunal of the land, and possesses high judicial qualifications. Speaker Carlisle is also mentioned in this connection, as an able and learned lawyer, who could, perhaps, secure the appointment if he desired it. J. Randolph Tucker is mentioned as a competent lawyer, loyal to the Administration, and well deserving of honor. But he is barred if the rule of precedent is followed which directs the appointment of a justice from within the circuit for which he is selected. Justice Wood represents the Central and Southwestern circuit. Ex-Senator McDonald does not come within its boundaries, but Ohio is included in it, and ex-Governor Hoadley is presented as the candidate whom many politicians regard as a probable appointee. Ex-Gov-ernor Hoadley has friends who urge that he escapes all the grounds of objection; that his State is a proper one from which to make the selection; his war record unimpeachable; his legal attainments unquestionable, and his position
